WAR EXPERIMENTS ON MOUNTAIN TOP

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., Nov. 29.—Pike's Peak played a not inconsiderable part in the winning of the world war.

Experiments conducted on the peak proved useful in testing candidates for air pilots as to their adaptability for flying at high altitude. These experiments were begun in 1911 by Dr. E. C. Schneider head of the biology department of Colorado College, and fellow scientists from Oxford and Yale, assisted by students in Dr. Schneider's classes. At that time, of course, no one knew that the work would have military value; but testing apparatus designed by Dr. Schneider from his observations on the peak have become standards and at the ending of hostilities were part of the equipment of every aviation field.

The experiments were planned for the purpose of determining the physiological effects of high altitudes and led to important discoveries in regard to the action of the heart at thousands of feet above sea level. It also was discovered that height has the effect of increasing the white corpuscles of the blood and consequently raised disease-resistant powers. The experiments gave valuable information to the science of medicine as well as to that of war making.

The United States recognized the value of Dr. Schneider's observations, calling him to Washington soon after the nation had entered the war. Later he was sent to the aviation laboratory at Mineola, Long Island. He was commissioned a captain in the army and later a major.

Major Schneider called to aid him a number of his former students who had taken part in the experiments on Pike's Peak, and at the ending of hostilities they were almost on every aviation field in the United States.

Pike's Peak did another bit of war service. Its summit was the experimental station for the Liberty motor. The peak, towering more than 14,000 feet above sea level, is an ideal place for testing motors under conditions under which they operate.

BOCHE FIRE FAILS TO STOP YANKS

SALT LAKE, Nov. 29.—That the Huns, prior to signing the armistice, took particular delight in shelling American lines and camps at night to prevent the men from obtaining rest and to break their morale and powers of resistance if possible, is stated in a letter received yesterday from D. Richard Gill, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. David R. Gill, 258 North Eighth West street.

The letter is dated October 7, a little more than a month before hostilities ceased. It comes from "Somewhere in France," with the signal platoon of headquarters company of the 321st infantry.

"There have been air machines flying over us all day," the young soldier writes, "and our antiaircraft guns have been banging away at them about every minute. The Germans seem to think it is most fun for them to disturb our sleep at night by the roaring noises of their bombs and shells, evidently in an attempt to break the courage and morale of the boys. But in this they are mistaken, because it only makes us go at them a little more vengefully next day."

"When the shells go over our heads they sing a whining song and whistle uncannily, too. The Hun likes to blow big holes in the roads and he invariably makes it a point to give ed on them by the German nation simply because the Hohenzollerns have gone out of business, nor can Great Britain forego the satisfaction of her claims in regard to her illegally torpedored merchantmen. To do so would be in effect to let the sea crimes. Some responsible government or governments will have to be set up by the German people, otherwise we might have no alternative but to occupy Germany ourselves for an indefinite period until the difficulties are cleared up. This of course would be taken with the utmost reluctance."

Hindenburg's recently wireless statement clearly indicated that such a step might come to be considered imperative by the associated powers. From the viewpoint of financial settlements of the future, the question is one of paramount importance. It is one in which America has in a sense the largest interest and presumably would have the deciding vote. Each refusal to consider any modification of the armistice terms entail Germany's entire compliance with, and execution, the conditions imposed upon and accepted by her. Non-compliance would precipitate action which it is all to Germany's interest to avert and which allied forces undoubtedly will not take if it can be avoided.

NORBECK RECOVERED.

DEADWOOD, S. D., Nov. 29.—Governor Peter Norbeck, who has been confined at a local hospital for several days suffering from influenza has almost entirely recovered.

PEACE AT ANY PRICE.

"What's the shape of the earth?" asked the teacher, calling suddenly upon Willie.

"Round."

"How do you know it's round?"

"All-right," said Willie, "it's square, then. I don't want to start any argument about it."

"Restitution and reparation must be bought from them on a colossal scale. It is out of the question that Belgium and France should be left to repair unaided the monstrous wrongs inflicted
